Edwin Peake denies the allegation that he has the contract for removing the Agricultural College—and he defies the allegator. He affirms that his contract is to remove the university horde from the gates of the city any time they come up here after the big school on the hill. As he says this Mr. Peake bares a biceps that measures twelve inches in circumference and points to his dray as evidence of his ability to take care of the situation. Personally, we are convinced and offer an humble apology—to the dray.

Rexburg Standard:—"A very serious accident occurred in the Standard press rooms on Friday afternoon last that came near costing the life of Arthur Wallis, the fifteen-year-old son of the business manager of the Standard. A piece of rope had got caught around the main shafting, and Arthur, without first shutting off the power, attempted to unwind it. Quick as a flash the thumb of his left hand got caught in the rope, and at once realizing his perilous position, in order to save himself from being twisted around the shafting, he jerked his hand away, pulling his thumb off below the first joint. Had he not made the sacrifice, he would without any question have lost his life. He was carried over to the office of Dr. Hyde, who at once placed him under the influence of an anesthetic and amputated his thumb at the second joint. The boy is doing well under all the circumstances, for besides the loss of his thumb his left forearm was badly wrenched, and he was severely shaken up."

Speaking of constables who are elected and never serve, the election of Charles Pearce, of Paradise, comes to mind. Mr. Pearce was not a candidate, no one had ever mentioned the matter to him, his name was not placed on the ticket, but still he was regularly and duly elected constable of the Paradise precinct. It's ridiculously funny to hear Pearce tell about it and then in mock honor and dignity pin on a large paper star and strut. He attributes his selection by written ballot as a mark of his popularity and then he laughs and struts some more. "I am an officer of the county—me—Chas. Pearce. Wouldn't that kill you! But say, I'll keep 'em straight all right. If I don't, I'll get some one who will. Charles Pearce, constable of Paradise precinct! Wouldn't that jar you," and then this officer without his consent and against his will laughs a long, loud, laugh, and everybody necessarily has to laugh with him, for he takes it all as such a huge joke.
